Artist's Bio

Currently pursuing an education in Studio Art: Drawing and Painting. Experienced in handling various types of individuals and situations, from educational and entertainment backgrounds. Seeking job opportunities that relate to the artist hemisphere.

Texas based artist, Kenneth Pham, with a main focus in acrylic, oil, fabrics, and mixed media, and currently attending the undergraduate Studio Art program at University of North Texas. While a new practicing artist, she has used art-making as an investigation through the human experience, identity, and mortality, through the lens of an asian-american trans artist.

Kenneth Pham aims to invite the audience into her own head through her artwork, as a means to understand humanity in its many stages. Kenneth pulls from her maladaptive daydreams, old photos, and human connections to create work that is curious, imaginative, and strange. She considers her body of work as physical manifestations of her mind-space, working mostly intuitively to recreate the exact image to mind. Through this intuitive process she seeks to find what makes us who we are, what links us together, and what parts of us are universal to change.

As a young artist I have many things ahead and I look forward to seeing what unfolds in the future.
